The research doesn't stop there. This same bureau is conducting numerous other experi ments, the exact nature of which cannot be rescaled, which promise equally important results. It is the same story with our other departments. Anatomy and physiology, bacteriology, psychology, engineering departments, the experiment station - these and still others keep technicians busy at the task of discovering the new, and classifying, developing, the old. But word leaks out slowly. Sometimes we wonde what these men are doing.

It is unfortunate that, because of efforts to popularize and make intelligible the reports of scientific progress, the newspapers have not always been scientilic in their reporting. As a consequence, they have lost face in the eyes of the scientists who are obtentimes reluctant to issue statements for Tear of distortion.

That feeling, praise be, is gradually disappearing. But mutil the men with the test tubes master their fear of seeing a treatise mutilated, become more articulate in regard to their achievements, and realize that many experimental results depend for their success upon public comprehension and acceptance, we individuals of he University like other millions must continne to grope with blind faith in the darkness. Until that time depending upon the occasional flare of publicity to justify and substantiate our belief that "those fellows" are performing modest miracles in the high halls of science.

We are living in a sad world. In all the varied activities of civilization, traditions are being blasted and the certainties of yesterday are becoming vague incaningless things today. We suppose it has always been thus - the old giving way to the new, except, of course, in the case of President Roosevelt who gives way to nobody but who gives away to everybody.

We took time off recently to see our annual lootball motion picture. Ever since we saw Red Grange the Galloping Ghost in "One Minute To Play," we have enjoyed a gridiron cinema. There's something southing in knowing the underdog team will come through before the

And then the final score. Of course the hero made it on a long run and in the last minute. but he had to catch a pass to do it, which means he didn't get to run through the whole team by himself. His touchdown made the score 12 to 9, when everybody knows that in a football picture the team is never supposed to win by more than one point.

And then the hero had the audacity to kick a point-after-touchdown, making the final score

... on the remarkable about-face of one Senator Lundeen . . .

When late last April Mr. Ernest Lundeen, the farmerabor senator from Minnesota, spoke at a special convocation here on the University campus, most of the student body seemed to receive the impression that he was a man of peace and international ethics.

We were jolted last week to find that this same idealistic rusader had arisen in the United States Senate and blandly proposed that we send our battleships down into the Caribbean and annex Britain's West Indian possessions. He suggests this, he says, on the basis that?
